Understanding the Difference Between Red and White Cedar

White cedar is naturally and consistently blonde in color and is milled into beautiful fence boards that are usually surfaced (planed) on the two faces and two edges. This wood weathers gracefully to a silvery gray and is very stable. Many coastal homes across New England are protected with beautiful white cedar roofs and siding. White cedar is typically milled and sourced from New England and Quebec. Its proximity to this region makes it very affordable.

Red cedar is naturally cinnamon in color and is milled into a wide variety of fence boards. The boards range from rough sawn to surfaced on all four sides. This fiber typically has a broad spectrum of color and weathers darker than white cedar. Red cedar is also very stable and has many other uses, including timber framing and interior carpentry.

Wooden fences made of cedar are the most traditional fences in America and often the most affordable. We believe our line-up of cedar fences is pretty awesome. Sure, we offer some of the same mainstream products as other companies, but we have a great selection of unique styles designed just for you.

Want a traditional picket fence to accent your home or protect your veggie garden? We got 'em! Do you want privacy? Our privacy fences will transform your backyard into an oasis. Split rail, English hurdle, basket weave and basic stockade fences are just a few of the options we offer.

Fence Styles

We have styles to meet every need. Privacy, picket, semi-private, decorative - you name it, we'll make it. If you don't see anything that suits your fancy in the styles below, keep in mind that we do custom styles, too! Just let us know what you're thinking, and we'll make it happen.

These are some of our most popular styles. The "specifications" section lets you know which options are most popular.

Want something a little more unique than the classics? We can make some tweaks, or do something totally out of the box. Below are some popular options to choose from, but remember: the sky is the limit!

STEP 1: choose your fence style
First, identify the fence's main function. If you're looking for curb appeal, consider a picket fence. But if the reason for the fence is to keep the dog in, privacy might be the way to go. This is also when you pick the fence height. Standard heights are 4, 5 and 6 feet.

STEP 2: choose your top style
This is where you select the overall shape of the fence: flat, domed, or scalloped.

STEP 3: choose your picket style
When you pick Flat for your top style, you get to choose a picket style, too. When you choose Domed or Scalloped, the standard top style is flat, but you may choose a picket style if you would like.
